

Temples for the soul

Known simply as the "Village by the Sea" or often the more grandiose "Recreation Capital of Canada," Comox, B.C. is a paradise for those who enjoy a natural, active lifestyle.

Anchored on an aesthetic dominated by the luminous blues and deep greens of the town's ocean-side mountain landscape, Comox is the ideal setting for an ambitious development like Mandira by the Sea, a collection of 38 one of a kind waterfront condominium homes.

"I have a passion for the west coast," explains architectural designer Brian Hemingway. "The forest, the rocks, the ocean; bringing all these elements together in a poetic way to take my clients into a slightly different realm, a consciousness of indoors and outdoors and where the water meets the land."

Inspired by Frank Lloyd Wright's principles of organic architecture, Hemingway's own style is reflected at Mandira, one of his rare multi-residential projects. His work evokes intimations of natural harmony, intuition and integration, which is why he believes that homes are more than buildings; rather, they should be designed as temples for the soul.

Set amid lush landscaping and its own walkway to the sea, Mandira offers an exquisite rooftop garden where you can entertain friends and enjoy the majestic harbour and mountain views. With large floor plans and the generous flow of light and air, Mandira's interiors bring coast living indoors and elevate the distinctive island style to new levels.

Centrally located just off Comox Avenue, residents will enjoy the convenience of being a few minutes walk from specialty shops, great dining, cafes and the Comox Marina, where you can catch a sailing or fishing charter for the day. By car, Mandira is a short drive to several different golf courses, Mt. Washington Alpine Resort, hiking and water sports, making it the perfect residence for individuals who take pleasure in the environment they live in.
